While all of these tools have different functions and so are somewhat irrelevant in their own right, this article examines the features of Photoshop and Photoshop Elements. Why is Photoshop better than Photoshop Elements? Both Photoshop and Elements are powerful tools, but in some ways, Adobe Photoshop is better than Photoshop Elements for different reasons: The user interface Adobe Photoshop is easier to use and more intuitive than Photoshop Elements. For one thing, Photoshop Elements' interface is a bit confusing. Every time you choose one of the toolboxes, you're required to click File ► Open, so if you have a lot of files to open, it can get tedious. There are also a number of keyboard shortcuts that are useful for working with files. Photoshop has a lot more keyboard shortcuts than Photoshop Elements does: The built-in layer mode It's hard to live without the built-in layer mode, Photoshop's ability to work with different types of layers. With a single click, you can easily turn an image into a smart object. Adobe Photoshop allows you to work with multiple layers quickly. For example, if you are editing a photo of a restaurant, you can simply add a new layer that lets you zoom in on a particular part of the image, making it easier to examine details. With Photoshop Elements, you are only able to work with a single layer, but the Photoshop toolbox lets you work with layers. With Elements, you need to use the menu option Edit ► Make a Smart Object before you can edit a layer. With Elements, it can be much more frustrating to accidentally switch between two layers, and the menu settings of elements are limited. Check out our tutorial on how to use layers in Photoshop Elements, and we'll show you how to switch between layers in Photoshop. The import options Adobe Photoshop makes it easy to import images from RAW files and digital cameras. With Elements, you can import RAW files, but the files that can be imported vary and there is no RAW feature. In fact, Photoshop Elements does not allow you to edit RAW files, but it does offer a decent overview. Working with RAW files is a good option if you want to ensure that your images are shot at the highest quality or if you own a digital camera that is capable of capturing RAW files. It offers anonymous transactions, but its reputation has taken a beating because of some of the scammers who have taken advantage of people, so it's a very sensitive issue for most people. I must say, anonymous transactions are a beautiful thing, but only if you have complete control over your own identity. And only if you choose to do it. The whole point of cryptocurrencies and cryptography is that as soon as you need to trust someone, it doesn't work anymore. So, if I were in the position of a "bitcoin millionaire" (according to some blogger), I would probably feel bad about it. But, I wouldn't stop using it (or moving to another crypto-currency) because of some setbacks. With that said, I think the number of such "bitcoin millionaires" is relatively low. There are people who have become very rich from the Fintech boom, but what's true is that they have toiled in the field for many years to get there. They are typically entrepreneurs, founders, or early stage investors that were part of the growing crypto-currency industry in the last few years. On the other hand, I've been fortunate enough to visit the WeWork offices in Silicon Valley, which is the favorite office among the company founders. There, I've

Q: Updating an entity retrieved from a repository with a different set of parameters I have a query that returns a list of entity objects that I'm displaying using a datagrid. I have an edit form that's bound to the entity. There is a button within the grid that says "Submit changes." When that button is clicked, I need to submit the changes back to the server via a POST request. Problem is I cannot get this submitted properly because after I submit the form the entity object that I am binding to has changed and the entity that is being retrieved from the datastore isn't updated. Here is the code: // Grab the entity and populate the form var entity = (NHibernate.ISession.CreateCriteria().Add(x => x.MonitorId == monitoringEntity.MonitorId).List()).FirstOrDefault(); monitoringForm = new MyEntities.MonitorForm { DisplayName = entity.DisplayName, Address = entity.Address, }; // Bind the form to the entity monitoringForm.Monitor = entity; dataGridMonitoring.DataSource = monitoringForm; When the user clicks the submit button, my code does the following: // Setup the
