APKÂ .Molecular cloning and functional expression of the cDNA encoding the human aldo-ketoreductase AKR1C2. A cDNA encoding a member of the human aldo-ketoreductase (AKR) family, AKR1C2, was isolated and sequenced from the human placenta. This cDNA encodes an open reading frame of 1,376 nucleotides, encoding a predicted protein of 477 amino acid residues. The deduced amino acid sequence was shown to be >75% identical to that of human AKR1C3, a member of the same subfamily. Expression of cDNA encoding the human AKR1C2 in Escherichia coli as a fusion protein with glutathione S-transferase indicated that the protein is localized in the soluble fraction and exhibited NADPH-dependent 1alpha-hydroxyandrostene(17beta)-carbonitrile reductase (hydroxysteroid:NADP1alpha-delta-oxidoreductase, EC 1.1.1.62) activity. Moreover, the recombinant human AKR1C2 expressed in E. coli exhibited aldo-ketoreductase activity toward aromatic aldehydes.Breadcrumb Google's new $20 million'smart' speakers are definitely smart SAN FRANCISCO - Google on Tuesday unveiled a new lineup of internet-connected devices, including two smart speakers that support a variety of voice functions and a $129 video camera that streams directly to YouTube. The devices, targeted at home and office environments, are designed to search the world's information and to work with one another as well as with Google Home, its smart speaker system, and Chromecast, a device that lets people stream content from their smartphones or other computers to TVs. Google unveiled them at an event at the company's San Francisco headquarters, a year after revealing Chromecast and Google Home. Google has been increasing its focus on its hardware and services over the past few years,
