The present invention relates to a method for generating a mark on a document, a mark being a transparent information area, for example a coding or a fingerprint, the mark being positioned below a surface of the document, the method comprising scanning a top portion of a document by means of a scanner, recognizing a predetermined coordinate pattern, and generating the mark in an area of a coordinate pattern. U.S. Pat. No. 4,123,962 describes a method for generating image-coded markings in a pattern, which pattern is hidden from an observer behind a transparent plate. The pattern includes a regular array of indicia positioned below the plate, and a scanning device produces a two-dimensional scan along a first path which extends across the top of the plate above the indicia and then across the indicia. The indicia is recognized when a boundary is detected between the indicia and the pattern having the indicia therein, and the indicia itself is obscured during the scan. The pattern is scanned in an intermittent sequence, each sequence including a period of time during which the indicia is obscured, an interval of time during which the indicia is visible, and a period of time during which the indicia is obscured. During each scan along the path, the indicia is continuously visible until the phase in which the indicia is obscured begins. A drawback of the above method is that during scanning, the indicia is obscured for a relatively long time which leads to an image degradation. The present invention is related to a method for generating a mark, said mark being a transparent information area, for example a coding or a fingerprint, the mark being positioned below a surface of the document, the method comprising scanning a top portion of a document by means of a scanner, recognizing a predetermined coordinate pattern, and generating the mark in an area of a coordinate pattern. According to the present invention, scanning is performed so that during scanning the mark is hidden behind other information. This is achieved by using a fixed scanning trajectory across a document, which trajectory is such as to conceal the mark behind a layer of information. According to the invention, a document is scanned in a fixed scanning trajectory. The scanning trajectory is such as to conceal the mark behind a layer of information. The scanning trajectory is determined by a sequence of scanning and hiding cycles. This, in turn, is achieved by means of a number of different methods, any of which makes it possible to continuously hide the mark from the scanner. In the scanning cycle, it is important for
