Darrell Revis, the Giants' nickel corner, and veteran Josh Thomas are battling for that spot. Thomas is not expected to be a candidate for the jets' final roster spot. Although Webster, 26, is likely to be claimed by another team, the reports that the jets are willing to pay big money to keep him in the fold should give the Giants pause. It appears they're willing to pay Webster a seven-figure contract in an attempt to bring a lockdown cornerback back to the Big Apple. Receivers Hakeem Nicks and Mario Manningham will be in the final year of their rookie contracts in 2013. The Giants are expected to choose to work out a new deal with Nicks, but Manningham will be a restricted free agent, opening the door for the Jets to retain him. The Giants will likely try to retain Manningham, and having another playmaker on the outside could help their offense. Meanwhile, former Giants cornerback Corey Webster has received his release from his former team, the Buffalo Bills.Prizma: wearable multisense headset unveiled

It is one of a variety of paper money fakes known as "paper money forgeries". Folded copy money is the type of faked bill most often seen in the United States. It is most commonly seen in the form of copies of genuine U.S. currency, such as one hundred dollar bills. The copy is made by taking a genuine bill and folding it back on itself in order to make the bills appear new, while exposing suspicious characteristics. In the United States, it is generally illegal to acquire, possess or pass folded copy money. History Though folded copy money can be traced back to the 1960s, it started to become popular in the early 1980s. During this time period, U.S. counterfeiters began using the paper money to pass counterfeit bills undetected. This was because the folds in the folded copy bill make it difficult to counterfeit. Characteristics Folded copy money usually begins with a one hundred dollar bill. The folded copy bill is folded the opposite direction, thus making the once vertical fold on the bill horizontal. Before the hundred dollar bill is folded, all the ink is removed from the four corners of the bill, and black marks are made. After the hundred dollar bill is folded, ink is added to the top and bottom edges of the hundred dollar bill. These inks are usually the same color of ink the back of the folded copy bill is. Some folded copy money bills have ink underneath the fold line, and ink in the back. After the ink is added, the folded copy bill will have fingerprints added to it. The fingerprints are applied by first looking over the folded copy bill to get an idea of what looks like a fingerprint. This idea is then turned into the actual e79caf774b
