A fire retardant composition is a material that acts to retard the speed at which combustion of a material occurs. In a particular example, the fire retardant material may be used as an additive component in a fire-retardant component of a material. In one particular example, the material is a structure (such as a building or a vehicle) that may be subjected to heat from a source of combustion. The fire retardant material may be used in conjunction with other materials to mitigate and/or prevent the spread of the fire. An example of a system for detecting a fire includes a system that may detect the presence of smoke as the main indicator of fire. Certain fire retardant materials may be used in connection with coatings of a building that may be coated in such a way to retard the spread of the fire. In particular, if the coating or fire-retardant material is applied to a combustible material, it may be used to reduce the rate at which the combustible material is oxidized, thereby reducing the rate at which the material can combust. Certain structures may be coated in a particular way to enhance the fire resistance of the structure. For example, the coating may be applied to a flammable material in a coating that is transparent in the infrared spectrum. The transparent coating may allow the infrared radiation to pass through, thereby allowing the interior of the structure to be monitored. With respect to mobile structures, such as an aircraft, it may be desirable to monitor the condition of the aircraft by allowing for detection of the presence of smoke that is generated as the aircraft is on fire. Regardless of the type of structure

1 Tuning - RC's This was brought about by reading Eric Belski's BSJ Racing. In it they do a Direct Drive tuning by DeltaV with a AC Delco MPK '86 used in conjunction with a tessellation 20 downpipe. Would this type of Direct Drive tuning be readily adopted for FD1's? Update - After parting with the RIMS & a CAD of the front of the car Eric was able to take the mounty clearance (z placement) from the back of the damper, located the rear drive shaft, and measured the axle diameter from the car. Eric has a DD kit designed only for the rear axle. When installed the maximum change is .75 inches... That's quite a bit. everset's FD1's FD2's are using the NDX direct drive setup on the front so that there is no crank angle restriction on bottom or top dead center, and there is more pre-load on the wheel before top dead center. In his case he pulls the preload without changing the lockout / hydraulic accum valve. Les's FD1's fit the NDX setup directly behind the differential. The factory has changed the differential gearing for FD1's but that shouldn't matter with a changes the spur gear angles. RD700 has DD on both front and rear axles - and trades off some bottom end torque and a slight bump in hp for more bottom end torque. As with DD motorsport, May be worth looking into to has the added flexibility of using headshock mounts. It's less sophisticated, cheaper, and more easily adjustable than DD motorsport, but still doesn't allow you to completely eliminate the weak link. I'm curious to see how Best Power's CFD setup turns out. DSE's CFD setup has been demonstrated to be very viable for the FD1. I won't be surprised if they expand to the FD2 model. I suspect that with a DD setup, DD motorsport would have an edge since a DD setup cuts down on the torque resonances that DD motorsport mitigates using driver mounting points and compensators. It will have a few more weak links, but I think it's a small change. When 3 guys with DD setups meet up on the track, how do they compare? Flexibolox always get's me. That alone wouldn't be such a problem, but if all of the DD guys come up with
