'Grand Theft Auto V' to debut DRM-free on PC Users still have a PC-based way to get their hands on the game that's won thousands of awards, including an Academy Award for Best Picture, but at least we won't have to rely on Steam. According to a press release, we won't be seeing Grand Theft Auto V in the Steam store, which has, so far, been a pretty reliable way to get Rockstar's game in our hands. The PC version of GTAV will be distributed via Steam's "Greenlight" system, meaning that Steam will act as a middleman rather than providing the distribution itself, while still getting a cut of the sales. No exact release date was provided by EA or Rockstar, but it's coming soon.Life on the first anniversary of the Arab Spring. Menu The celebrations of Bahrain's first anniversary of its ouster of its king are not unlike the celebrations that occurred all over the world at the same time on February 29, 2011. The Bahraini king, Hamad bin Isa Al Khalifa, is nowhere to be found. His sons and daughters, the King of Bahrain and the crown prince and his sons, are in hiding, and the only foreign leader to be spotted was the king of Jordan, who by the way is the chairman of the Arab League's Executive Board. President Obama, is a bit on shaky ground, and even he is facing backlash from his supporters, who say that he should have been more supportive of the Bahraini government. A the other side, Obama's detractors say that the president said it best when he said that the legitimacy of the United States' occupation of Iraq, called for by Congress, was "ungovernable". That seemed like a good way to describe the Arab Spring in Bahrain. The fears of an uprising among the Bahraini people were not unfounded. The Sunni minority, which has dominated Bahrain since its annexation in the early 20th century, overthrew the Shia majority in 1958, and the Shia majority population had to run for their lives and settle somewhere else. The king and his family came to the throne in 1962 upon the death of their father, the then-king, Hamad bin Isa Al Khalifa. The one-time loyalists of the Khalifa family were mainly Sunnis of the Zaydis, whose Muslim branch is called the Shias. The Sh

Cloud Imperium Games Has Landed on the Shard We've seen blimps appear above Google's European data center in Ireland, and now it's time to see one take flight above downtown London. Yesterday, we told you of a new company formed by CCP Games and several other companies as part of the fallout from the MMO's impending bankruptcy. The company, which includes the studios behind the space combat/pew-pew PC titles Star Citizen and ArmA II, is now located inside a former Harrods department store at the Shard in London — the building that's currently home to Apple's London HQ and Frankfurt office. This reminds me of the time I bought a cheap flight ticket to go to an out-of-the-way holiday destination. On my flight to the airport, I sat next to a window seat that was packed with travelling businessmen and women. I tried to strike up conversation with them, but they didn't know I wasn't in the industry and wanted to be. My neighbour was a nervous young man working at a publicly funded body who was convinced he'd have his boss call his boss to report his "misbehaviour". Other companies seem to be having luck despite not being located in the UK, such as Arma II's parent company Bohemia Interactive. Boims CEO Marek Spanel told Gamesindustry.biz last year that the European Union's new data privacy law meant that companies like his could no longer thrive outside of the EU. "Big, well-established companies cannot be created," he said. "They need a lot of money. It's very hard to do it with a small company. You need a big company." The Co-founder of Counter-Strike creator Valve, Gabe Newell, has revealed that he plans to relocate the entire company to Seattle. Given that the Seattle area is a hub of innovation in computer games, it's no doubt that Valve is hoping that no other game creator steps up to the plate.The centerpiece of a controversial plan to curb the proliferation of illegal guns in the US state of Maryland, which has seen guns seemingly available to anyone on the streets of Baltimore, has been frozen after the state's top cop decided it would send the wrong message to law enforcement to be carrying guns in public. The Maryland
