tools available when you decide to buy a home is a comprehensive home valuation report. A well-researched and professionally prepared home valuation report will set you up to make a fair, informed decision regarding the purchase price of your new home.

What Exactly Is A Home Value?

The value of a home is the appraised value based on what a knowledgeable and informed buyer would pay for it. The home value report you receive from a local lender is usually based on recent comparable home sales in the area. Home valuation reports and home value estimates are produced by local real estate agents. An agent can provide you with a comprehensive property report, including a detailed list of comparable sales that sold within the last year. These recent sales will help you compare the properties you're researching to the ones that have recently sold and determine the proper fair market value for your property.

How Is A Home Value Reported?

A lender will look at a home's value based on comparable property sales in the area. The agent who prepares the report, or his or her service, compares the value of the home you are investigating to the most recent sales of other comparable properties sold in the area. If you're lucky, the agent will have access to one or more nationwide databases that have consistent, up-to-date data. When figuring out what a home is worth, a home valuation report takes into consideration both the internal features and the surrounding neighborhood. The agent will look at the property's zoning, physical features and improvements, yard, lot size, property line, and surrounding neighborhood.

Types Of Valuation Report

There are three different types of real estate valuations used throughout the industry. A market appraisal is an approximate indication of the value of your home. The market appraisal takes into account the entire area in which you're located, including its proximity to major public transportation and major thoroughfares. A recent comparable sale is more specific to your property
