[The role of the endoscopic treatment of gastric varices. Apropos of 100 cases]. To analyse the role of endoscopic therapy in the management of gastric varices, a prospective series of 100 patients treated during a six year period in order to assess the therapeutic value of endoscopy. The following regimens of endoscopic sclerotherapy have been applied: adrenaline/ethiodized oil (30 patients), disodium-ethyl-sulmonate-adrenaline/ethiodized oil (17 patients), adrenaline alone (8 patients), disodium-ethyl-sulmonate-adrenaline (16 patients) and disodium-ethyl-sulmonate (6 patients). Analysis of the results after the first and the last endoscopic treatment using a scoring system taking into account: varices size, size of varices greater than 1 cm, number of endoscopic sessions and thrombosis on follow-up endoscopy. We present: a) the characteristic of the patients (50 males, 50 females, mean age 47 years, range 15-73) and b) the results of therapy. The endoscopic treatment was complicated in 2/100 patients. 5/10 patients presented recurrences of haemorrhage. 1/10 patients died after variceal bleeding. Endoscopic therapy was effective in 88/100 patients. Mean follow-up period was 46 months (range 6-144 months).1. * Bucket Fill helps with gradient fills. * Bucket (or _gamut_) fills are gradient fills, applied in a bucket that lets you choose the exact hue of the color. You can also add a tint, or tint blend, to a bucket fill. * Burn copies the background of an image to the foreground to obscure it, or removes part of the foreground in front of the background. * Blur produces blur, applying a smooth blur filter to an image, which results in a slightly softening of the edges. (Blur filters are discussed in detail on Working with the Blur Filter, earlier in this chapter.) * Blur is another filter that you use for softening edges. This filter takes only the edges of an image and blurs them, as in the Burn filter. * Brightness/Contrast controls the overall brightness of the image. This isn't a major tool, but it's useful for getting images just to the right level of brightness. There's no setting to apply a contrast to the entire image (that would be silly), but there is one for adjusting the brightness of a specific area. * Bucket Fill is a color adjustment tool for filling gradients, or filling the foreground of an image with a solid color. It's most commonly used for creating a drop-shadow effect. * Burn copies the background of an image to the foreground of an image and obscures it, or removes part of the foreground in front of the background. * Caret (as opposed to Crop) resizes the image by cropping it from the center to the outside or by cropping it from the top to the bottom. * Crop rectangles are very useful for cropping images. You can crop a new or existing photo into a rectangular shape (as illustrated), or you can crop an image and save it as a new image format. * Dodge and Burn are filters that are similar to each other. They both lighten or darken an image by copying a portion of the image from the middle to either the top or bottom. The Burn filter lightens the image. The Dodge filter darkens the image. * Exposure controls the amount of light in an image. This filter isn
