The solution is to make sure that the Developer tab is selected (shown below) and then to press "Run." If you try to do this through the menu, it is not what you are looking for. A: The problem should have been fixed, as it is when I tried it. I am assuming you are using the latest build. Due to the aging of the population in many countries, non-communicable diseases (NCDs) will become an even larger burden on national health care budgets. In the case of NCDs, medical care and treatment is dependent on the diagnosis and, at least in some cases, the severity of the disease. As a result, in many countries, large numbers of patients are not diagnosed for NCDs until late in the disease process. Because early diagnosis of NCDs may lead to a reduction in morbidity and mortality for the patient, early NCD detection, diagnosis and treatment are all critically important. As an example, for the diagnosis of diabetes, the current standard clinical test for the diagnosis of diabetes involves measuring the concentration of glucose in a patient's blood sample. Based on this value, the patient is classified as having Type I or Type II diabetes. However, there are conditions in which the use of a patient's blood sample for glucose concentration measurement requires significant added complexity. For example, due to the presence of other blood components, such as bilirubin, hemoglobin, or proteins, the patient's blood sample may be clotted prior to the analysis of glucose concentration. The treatment of a non-clotted blood sample for the determination of glucose concentration requires the addition of a chemical. As a result, blood samples must be collected prior to clotting and the glucose concentration must be measured in a separate sample. The need to process separate blood samples adds additional steps and time to the diabetes diagnosis, and thus, increases the time between blood collection and the analysis of the glucose concentration. Accordingly, an improved system, method and apparatus is needed for the rapid, reliable, and noninvasive measurement of glucose concentration.Q: What does "he is a short man" mean in this context? "You must be a good man to bear the separation from a good woman without making yourself miserable," she said. "That is what I am doing," he answered. "You are a short man, the very short man," she observed, looking at him with her head on one
