repetition Spaced repetition is a memory strategy, in which a word is repeated several times a day for a certain length of time, for instance in the morning and evening. One of its main features is that it helps to improve memory. A study by Van der Linden et al. (2010) even showed that spaced repetition can help improve students' learning (and results) in the general education core subjects (i.e. not only in those subjects in which spaced repetition is explicitly used). The studies by Duschka et al. (2003) and Van den Bosch (2009) show that it is possible to use spaced repetition to not only improve memory but also in some cases to improve comprehension. In spaced repetition, learners are provided with a word list to learn and after a specific amount of repetitions the word list is presented a second time, this time with the same word repeated several times. In this way, learners can form a mental “image” of the word and can retrieve it at a later point in time. The time between the learning and the repeated presentation can vary from 5 minutes to a month. Different applications have been made which use spaced repetition. The most famous application of spaced repetition is probably Anki (Andrade et al., 2011). In the game that you will play in this lesson, you will try to learn new words and be quizzed on them. You will have to do this by using spaced repetition. The word level In this lesson we will focus on word level. In general, we have two ways of learning words. First we can learn words by their meaning and second by their sounds. However, the combination of both of these is probably the most effective method for learning words (Schlagheck, 2008). For a general overview of word learning, we recommend
