I have provided in Part II of this article an overview of resilience concepts and their role in the mind-body explanation of the health of the human mind-body system. In this article I will present the results of a study examining the extent to which older adults in East Jerusalem in Israel demonstrate resilience. Researchers asked each participant to answer questions about their self-concept (that is, the characteristics that make up their sense of self and their psychological maps), and about their perception of changes in their life. The results revealed that the older adults in this study were indeed resilient. However, this outcome may not have been so had the researchers decided to ask the participants about their well-being, and not their psychological maps.Q: Android, callback not working for intent I'm a newbie on android development. What I am trying to do is to detect an intent (it will be a permanent or temp intent) and send it to the service. I want to send it to a service, but it seems that the intent is not detected.
